

Index Diversification with SBA Pools

Many, if not most, of the floating rate securities held in depository portfolios are currently indexed to LIBOR. With the planned cessation of LIBOR at the end of 2021, SBA 7(a) pools provide a great option to further diversify your index mix prior to LIBOR's elimination.

While much work has already been done on the transition away from LIBOR, the initiative is starting to get a lot more attention from key stakeholders. Much of the effort now is focused on working out the operational details of the preferred replacement benchmark, the Secured Overnight Financing Rate (SOFR).

With the targeted date of LIBOR's cessation approaching, some institutions with large exposures to LIBOR have already begun to further diversify their index mix. SBA 7(a) pools provide a great vehicle for doing this given the following considerations:

- SBA pools are one of the few instruments tied to Prime Rate.
- Prime is an administrated rate and is not impacted by daily market volatility or market driven phenomena, such as we saw with overnight repo rates last fall.
- Prime has moved lock-step with the Fed Funds Target Rate over the last two decades, maintaining a constant spread of 300 basis points. In effect, a bond that resets at Prime less 250 basis points is equivalent to resetting at 50 basis points over the Fed Funds Target Rate.
- Prime has been well correlated to both 1-month Libor and the 1-year CMT rate, as can be seen in Charts 1 and 2 on the following page.

Beyond index diversification, the flat nature of the yield curve creates very good relative value in SBA floaters, with current yields exceeding those of much longer-term fixed rate alternatives. Pools priced close to par provide current yields of over 2.00%, while those priced at premiums can yield close to 2.50%, depending on specific price point and level of prepay speeds.

It's also noteworthy that the SBA 7(a) market has grown considerably in recent years. Total annual issuance the last four years has averaged $8.2 billion, compared to an average annual issuance level of only $3 billion in the early 2000s. This increased volume has made for a much more active secondary market with better overall liquidity.
